Sarah Westall is an investigative journalist, media personality, and trailblazing voice who exposes the critical stories mainstream media often misses. She is known for her work in challenging narratives and uncovering truths that shape the world.

Sarah brings real-world insight to her work, shaped by her experience as a former business professor and multi-million-dollar entrepreneur. While teaching leadership, ethics, and innovation at the Carlson School of Management, one of America's top business schools, she inspired future business leaders with her hands-on expertise.

She's known for coining the phrase "Blackmail is the currency of the powerful"—a stark truth she revealed through exclusive interviews with intelligence whistleblowers. Her investigative work pulls back the curtain on global power structures with clarity and courage.

As the founder of United for Free Speech, Sarah is a unifying force in the fight for open dialogue. She has organized landmark conferences that bring together censored voices from across the political spectrum, proving that

"free speech is a cause that transcends party lines."
